

BRIAN HELFAND: We have a very multidisciplinary approach to prostate cancer care. Again, in terms of screening, we are regularly offering the latest biomarker-type screening tests that really kind of help stratify patients to risk.

Our nurse navigators as well as physicians, physician assistants, and of course urologists are regularly engaged with patients, their caregivers out of state as well as their caregivers in-state to make sure that everyone's communicating appropriately to help guide a personalized screening program for them.

In addition, if a patient is diagnosed with prostate cancer at North Shore then we also employ a multidisciplinary team that includes urologists who are surgeons specialized in prostate cancer such as myself, medical oncologists, as well as radiation therapy.

We also have as part of that team nurse navigators to help guide the system, order additional tests where needed. We also have dieticians as well as physical therapists and advanced nurse practitioners who are specialized in sexual medicine as well as pelvic floor muscle health.
